

Study at a British University

MARSHALL SCHOLARSHIPS 2010

The Marshall Scholarships, funded by the British Government, were established in 1953 as a national expression of gratitude to the United States for economic aid under the Marshall Plan after World War II.

The Scholarships are awarded annually to up to forty young US citizens, who are college graduates. The benefits include tuition fees, a living allowance, fares between the United States and Britain, and a book grant.

The Scholarships enable the successful candidates to study a wide range of subjects for a further degree at any of Britain's universities.

The selectors are looking for candidates of high ability and wide interests who plan to take up careers not only in higher education but in commerce and industry, the arts and professions and public life generally.

Further information may be obtained from the Scholarship Adviser on Campus or the nearest British Consulate.
